Yesterday was a day mostly of allowing our bodies to catch up. This trip has been harder physically than any before it. While getting off of the train on Saturday morning my foot slipped and I did not go all the way down but I did manage to injure my left thigh. It has been getting better every day but it really needed to just rest. This morning things seem to be close to normal. We have had two good night's sleep.

Today things really kick into gear. Ava and I did teach one class in the

Students feeling blind

The fun part of this right now is that I only know what I will be teaching on at 10:00 a.m. Everything else will be just what ever they tell us when we walk into the class room.

We did accomplish something else yesterday. A little under two years ago I heard about a project that the church here

ABC School yesterday and I was called away on another matter. Ava then continued to teach two more classes. Her subject was the healing of the blind. She had the children put on blind folds and then asked them questions that could only be answered by people with vision. The day ended with Kate and Ava fixing supper. What we had was Vareniki. They are small dumplings that are filled with different things. We had two types one filled with a sweet cottage cheese and to other filled with cherries. There are many other flavors. Today I have two classes to teach in the congregation and then Ava and I will both be teaching in the ABC School.

so they could stream their recorded sermons, class lessons and Church and School information. The question is would people watch? The answer is a resounding yes. I was able to assist Vlad in getting the TV mounted and connected to the internet. The church here already has a large number of recorded lessons. We played a number of them yesterday and the parents watched. What a tool to spread the Gospel every day school is in session.
